

Experience the difference

A dedicated venue for leadership team development

Many providers talk about their 'exclusive' venues but mostly they mean that, being expensive, you will not be mixing with hoi poloi.

At High Trenhouse 'exclusive' means something different. It means you and your group have the whole place to yourselves: a place of your own with your own meeting rooms, your own dining room, your own bar and all amenities. The effect on group dynamics is hugely beneficial.

What makes a good venue depends on your purpose. To impress clients or to reward people, a luxury hotel in an exotic location may be ideal. For technical training, light and well-equipped workspace will be what matters most. However, when you want a leadership team to re-think your organisation's future, you need something different and special.

Remember that, throughout history, great leaders have sought out conditions that enable them to reflect deeply, to think new thoughts, to return with new insights - to refresh the soul, the heart and the mind.

To access high-level thinking, to inspire people to excel or develop strategies to feed into your business plan, it would be foolish to bow to the idea that going away may be 'sending the wrong message'. In these circumstances, going away to think is exactly what you must do.

The right venue can do half the job for you – and a poor choice may impoverish your outcomes. Exclusive use means people can get on with the job without being tempted by distractions. Quality matters - but don't be seduced by mere luxury. You need to be comfortable but not indulgent. You need professional workspace, responsive service, good food and drink. You need a place that responds to your changing needs. The privacy of exclusive use assures your commercial confidentiality. More important, a place that feels safe and secure, frees people to take the mental and emotional risks that alone result in creative outcomes.

Shaped for its purpose by feedback from countless groups, this is what has evolved at High Trenhouse, in the Yorkshire Dales National Park. This specially converted former farmstead is off the beaten track in beautiful unspoiled surroundings and yet easy enough to reach. The hospitality team personally welcomes you, looking after your needs throughout your stay. The office team supports you, as well as handling every detail of your event. Whatever activities you may need can be arranged for you. Here is a place to which you can return again and again, enjoying dedicated service in wonderful privacy and seclusion.

We invite you to feel the difference. Your outcomes will surely 'send the right message'. The right venue works wonders!
